NINE CARS OF MELONS SHIPPED

Farmers Are Busy Picking, Sorting and Crating First Crop of Cantaloupes

2,970 CRATES ARE SHIPPED

Eastern Markets Unable to Meet the Demand for Cantaloupes---Prices Good

The cantaloupe growers have been busy this week picking, crating and delivering their cantaloupes to the shipping stations at Safford and Pima.

Secretary Smith, of the Gila Valley Produce Association, and M. M. Cox, for Woolfolk & Crutchfield, of Pittsbury, have been directing the work of inspecting and loading the cars, and have been kept very busy since Friday, when the work began.

The loading of the refrigerator cars furnished by the Pacific Fruit Express Co., is being conducted under the special supervision of R R. Ronan, the company's agent, and the work of icing the cars is being carried out successfully.

The ice is shipped daily from the factory at Globe and is brought to the cars by Joseph Bingham, who has the contract. The amount of ice shipped in to date and placed in refrigerator cars is stated at 120,000 pounds. The cars will be iced again at El Paso, Texas, and at Kansas City. The icing of the cars forms a big part of the work.

The first shipment took place Monday, when two cars went out on the afternoon freight for Bowie. One car went out Tuesday and two cars on Wednesday from here and one car from Pima. Yesterday three cars were shipped. The total shipments up to yesterday being nine cars.

An average of 330 crates is loaded in each car, the total number of crates shipped to date being 2,970.

The work of picking and sorting the melons has been somewhat retarded by the continual rains, which have brought about abnormal conditions. But the grade and quality of the melons selected by the farmers and accepted by the cantaloupe inspectors is above the average, and the Gila valley melons are of the finest flavor.

At this time the only places were cantaloupes are being picked for shipments to Eastern markets, is in the Gila valley and the Las Cruces valley in New Mexico. The supply of melons in the Eastern markets is not up to the demand and the melons were selling this week in Chicago at $3.70 per crate. If this price keeps up, our local cantaloupe growers are sure of a handsome profit for their melons.

The growing of cantaloupes is a new industry for the Gila valley and has been very successfully accomplished this year. The obtaining of good prices in the East for the melons, assuring a profit to our farmers, will give encouragement for an increased acreage to be planted for next season. The experience this year in the growing, picking, sorting, crating and shipping will be very beneficial to our farmers in making the crop next year.

Los Angeles, Cal., is interested in the cantaloupe growing of the Gila valley. A telegram was received here Wednesday inquiring the number of cars shipped and if they are being iced properly.

It has been suggested that it might be possible next year to arrange shipments daily to go out in four or five cars. This plan would save considerable in the cost of icing.

E. M. Hurd, general manager of the Gila Valley Bank and Trust Co., came up from Globe Wednesday on a business visit for several days.

KILLING AT CLIFTON

Results in the Death of Deputy Sheriff Garnett and Mexican

As a result of an exchange of shots between Deputy Sheriff John D. Garnett, of Greenlee county, and a Mexican named Ben Palomona, at Clifton Sunday night, both were killed.

The killing was the result of the attempted arrest of Palomona by Deputy Sheriff Frank Ringgold. Palomona overpowered Ringgold and with some other Mexicans had severely beaten him over the head with his own gun, leaving him badly wounded.

Deputy Sheriff Garnett started to make the arrest, when Palomona drew his gun and shot the officer. Although mortally wounded, Garnett drew his gun and shot Palomona, killing him instantly.

Frank Ringgold is well known here, having resided at Solomonville for several years. He is a brother-in-law of Will Parks, who is in the cattle business in Graham and Greenlee counties.

SAFFORD WILL BE ON HIGHWAY

Members of Board of Control Inspect Route Through the Gila Valley

BOARD PLANS CONSTRUCTION

Work Will Be Pushed to a Finish as Soon as New Money Comes In

J. B. Girand, territorial engineer, and Robert A. Craig, citizen member of the Board of Control, accompanied by T. G. Norris, president of the Good Roads Association, and Reese M. Ling, of Prescott, arrived here Saturday morning from Globe, on a tour of inspection of the valley road for the purpose of reporting favorable on the plan to run the Territorial highway up the Gila valley from Globe to Solomonville.

The data secured by the party along the route of the proposed highway through the several counties will be presented to the meeting of the Board of Control, which will take place in Phoenix in August, at which time bids for the construction of several sections of the highway will be advertised.

While here the members of the party held a conference with Supervisors Z. C. Prina and Phil C. Merrill and J. J. Birdno in relation to the route through Graham county, and they declared themselves in favor of the highway coming up the Gila river and on through and by way of Clifton into New Mexico.

Another purpose of the present tour of inspection is to get the sentiment of the people of the several counties regarding the levy of the tax for continuing the work of constructing the highway. Although Graham county has been ordered to levy a tax of 25 cents on each $100, the board of supervisors refused to levy a tax of more than five cents, on the grounds that that sum represented more money than had been spent on the highway through Graham county, and for the further reason that the contemplated highway was to run north and south, instead of east and west through the county.

The party left here Saturday afternoon in their automobile, which they shipped on the freight from Globe, their destination being Tucson, from which place they went to Douglas.

ARRESTS FUGITIVE

Deputy Sheriff Johnson arrested Tomas Alcantra, a Mexican, who came in on the freight train from Globe last Friday afternoon. The arrest was made on an order from the sheriff of Gila county. Alcantra was taken back to Globe Saturday and arraigned before Justice Thomas on a charge of beating his board bill. He received a sentence of thirty days in jail.

CATTLE PROSPECTS GOOD

Ranges Are Covered with Grass and Water Is Plentiful

With young grass up from four to six inches all over the southern Arizona ranges and the water holes all full, cattle fat and sleek, range conditions could not be better than at the present time. Already this year rains have been bountiful and in some sections the rainfall has already approached well toward the average. If present conditions continue during the summer there will be more than the average of rainfall, insuring ample feed for the grazing stock and plenty of water to last well along to the winter rains.

All indications now point to an even better year for the cattle industry than was last year, which was exceptionally good. If prices hold up, and it is generally anticipated that they will, the stockmen have before them a period of unexampled prosperity.

PLACED UNDER BONDS

Sixto Molino and Jesua Sainz, arrested by Sheriff Anderson for marring bands on horses on the range near Bonita creek, had their hearing before Justice Jonson Friday afternoon. As a result of the testimony, they were held for the action of the grand jury. Bonds for $1,000 and $500, respectively, were furnished for their appearance in the District Court.

ARIZONA'S WEALTH

Great Increase in Assessed Value of Taxable Property Over 1910

The increase in the assessed value of the taxable property in Arizona for 1911 over the total of 1910 amounts to more than thirteen million dollars and brings the grand total to very near one hundred million dollars. About half of this increase is found in the raises made on railroad property in the Territory by the Territorial Equalization Board last month. This increase in assessed value is above all calculations of even the most optimistic, and shows that Arizona is making rapid progress and growing richer year by year.

It is expected that this material increase in taxable property will enable the board of control to fix a lower tax rate for this year, as the expense of government will not be materially increased.

Herewith is given a table, showing the valuation in each county for 1910 and the valuation for 1911, as it appears from the assessors' returns, above referred to. It shows a magnificient increase in every county, save one, Maricopa leading the procession, with Yavapai second. The only decrease is in Apache county.

Estimated valuation of assessable property in the Territory for 1911:

	1910	1911
Apache	$ 1,481,309.94	$ 1,234,247.34
Cochise	18,714,652.13	19,916,171.64
Coconino	3,962,889.88	4,828,000.04
Gila	6,311,355.33	6,760,000.00
Graham	8,429,529.34	2,915,037.00
Greenlee	.....	8,871,282.97
Maricopa	17,338,067.29	21,100,000.00
Mohave	1,978,795.29	2,454,974.16
Navajo	1,902,001.36	2,541,456.00
Pima	7,751,945.33	8,370,840.00
Pinal	2,689,128.71	3,627,372.73
Santa Cruz	2,241,182.54	2,866,007.40
Yavapai	9,617,565.58	11,777,862.33
Yuma	3,717,811.66	4,068,035.80
Total	$86,126,226.35	$99,218,504.01

Total increase, $13,092,201.66.

PIONEERS' DAY AT THATCHER

Celebration is Enjoyed by Large Growds of People from all Parts of Valley

OLD PIONEERS' ARE HONORED

Valley Team Defeats San Carlos Indians---Davis Wins Wrestling Match from Hicks

Soon after nine o'clock Monday, carriage loads of people came streaming into Thatcher from all parts of the valley and by ten o'clock the streets were filled. The pioneer band was on the scene early and passed about delighting the old pioneers and amusing the young. Between ten and eleven o'clock Amusement Hall was packed with people ready for the literary program. In the absence of W. W. Pace, J. F. Nash acted as master of ceremonies. All the old pioneers of the valley were invited to take seats of honor on the stage. A pretty badge was given to Reuben Allred, of Pima, as the oldest gentleman present, and one to Mrs. Ann Pace as being the oldest lady present.

The program was carried out as printed in last week's paper. The talk on "The Pioneers" given by R. E. Lee Wixom was brief, the subject matter was most excellent, and it was delivered in a masterly manner. The musical numbers called forth great applause. The toasts were brief and interesting, and the program proved to be a great success from start to finish.

Soon after dinner the baseball game took place between the valley team and the Indians from San Carlos. This proved to be very interesting from start to finish. The Indians started out as though they were going to win an easy victory, but it did not take the valley boys long to find out just what they had to meet, and then the Indians could do nothing. The valley boys won a decided victory, the score being 5 to 2.

The ladies' and children's sports took place immediately after the ball game, and were as follows: The nail driving contest took place between a number of married women, Mrs. Cynthia Layton carrying off the prize, a nice shirt waist.

A flag drill took place between girls from twelve to fourteen years of age, Lucy Damron winning the prize, a white lawn dress. Next came a scissors race, Dessie Morris winning the prize, a pair of embroidery scissors. The little girls between five and seven ran, Eleanor Wilson getting the prize, which was a doll. The girls between eight and twelve ran a scissors race, Eva Hoopes winning the prize, a necklace.

The boys came in for their share of the sports. A shoe race was run by a number of boys and Arnold Beers won the prize, a pair of shoes. Next came a three-legged race, in which Joseph Matthews and Hyrum Allen won prizes of pocket knives. Lynn Hoopes won the prize, a watch, in the straight race. A good many boys tried the bottle race, Farrell Evans winning the prize, a pair of overalls. The gunny sack race was won by Oscar Brown, the prize being a shirt.

While the ladies' and children's races were being run, the wrestling match drew large crowds of the older people to Amusement Hall. Hicks and Davis tried first. Hicks threw Davis once, Davis threw Hicks twice, giving Davis the victory. Orvill Allen and Mr. Greenhalgh tried a wrestling match, Mr. Allen winning the victory.

A number of horse races took place, which occasioned much interest.

The celebration ended with a grand ball in the evening, which was well attended and much enjoyed.

THE NELSON SUBSTITUTE

The Nelson substitute for the Flood statehood bill is the same measure recommended by the minority of the House Committee which was urged for adoption by Delegate Cameron.

This substitute practically eliminates the recall, so far as it applies to judicial officers. The new construction of Article VIII of the constitution, is as follows:

"That Article VIII of the said constitution of Arizona, in so far as it relates to the 'recall of public officers' shall be held and construed not to apply to judicial officers, and that the people of Arizona shall give their assent to such construction of Article VIII of the said constitution."

This construction of Article VIII, which eliminates the recall of the judiciary, must be agreed to by the people at the election which will be called by the governor for the purpose of voting for State officers. The Nelson substitute expressly states that Arizona shall be admitted into the Union "upon the fundamental condition that the recall shall not apply to the judiciary."

In other words, unless the people agree by their vote to eliminate the recall of the judges, Arizona will not be admitted to statehood.

The fact that the people adopted their constitution by a large majority vote, showing conclusively that they are in favor of applying the recall to the judiciary, as well as to other State officials, cuts very little ice with Senator Nelson, who represents the "interests" which have controlled the judiciary in this country for many years. In order to cut loose from the domination of those "interests," the people of Arizona voted in favor of applying the recall to the judiciary.

We believe that the people should still favor the recall of the judiciary as the only means of securing an honest judiciary, free from the control of corporations and politicians and should insist on the Senate adopting the Flood resolution.

TERRITORIAL FAIR

At a meeting last week in Phoe- of the Territorial Fair Commission, definite arrangements were made for holding the Seventh Arizona Annual Fair, the dates this year being November 6th to the 11th. Unlike past years, the work of preparation has been carried on for some months past by Shirley Christy, the secretary of the Fair Commission, and as a consequence matters are in such shape that the first work of the commissioners was largely the consideration of plans outlined by Mr. Christy.

Governor Sloan, who is a good friend of the Territorial Fair and much interested, has urged that an effort be made to secure new exhibits and this matter will be given especial attention. Increased premiums have been offered in all the various departments of the fair, and for their care and exhibition, several new buildings are being constructed.

Taken all in all the outlook for a successful fair this year is most encouraging. The Territorial Fair Commission is now composed of Hugh E. Campbell, of Flagstaff, who is president; E. R. Pirtle, of Douglas, and W. C. Foster, of Phoenix, treasurer. Shirley Christy has been re-elected secretary and many of the heads of the various departments of last year have been retained.

Man pursued by woman doesn't sprint enough at the start.

SEND EXHIBIT

The entire west will be advertised during the United States Land and Irrigation Congress to be held at Chicago from November 18th to December 9th of this year. The Southern Pacific Company and other Harriman lines have engaged the whole of the Coliseum Annex for purposes of exhibition, and every town, county or state tapped by these lines will be given the opportunity to show what advantages it may have to offer to the prospective home seeker.

To further this purpose, the space secured by the Southern Pacific and other allied lines, will be divided into lecture halls with moving picture facilities, and the towns and other centers that care to participate in the exhibits will be invited to send moving picture films and lecturers to depict to the public the opportunities for homes offered in the various districts. Photographs taken along the lines of the Southern Pacific, depicting the most interesting phases of home, farm and industrial life, will also be shown. The Land and Irrigation Congress has planned to occupy the entire Coliseum at Chicago, but as the space allotted to the several exhibits was thought not sufficient for that planned by the Southern Pacific for its western patrons, that company has concluded to secure the Annex for the western exhibits.

Here is an opportunity for the people of the Gila valley to advertise the wonderful agricultural possibilities of its fertile soil, by accepting the offer of the Southern Pacific Company and sending an exhibit of our agricultural products to be shown at the congress in Chicago.

COST OF TRUST BUSTING

There is criticism in Congress of the large fees paid by the Department of Justice to special attorneys for prosecuting the Trust cases—$81,000 to Henry L. Stimson, of New York, for prosecuting the Sugar Trust, $41,000 to Frank B. Kellogg, of St. Paul, for the Standard Oil cases, and so on. In all, $900,000 for lawyers' services and expenses in two years since Mr. Wickersham became Attorney-General.

The fees look generous, but it is certain that the defendant trusts paid equally able lawyers much larger fees to defend them, and it is to be noted that the government, and not the defendants, won every important prosecution undertaken, except the Pacific Railroad case.

The kind of lawyers that win this kind of cases get large fees. Is the government to be served by men of smaller talent and ability than the trusts? It used to be so. The Attorney-General is of the caliber to try such cases, but, obviously, when there are twenty or thirty important actions pending, he cannot try all of them.

The public does not want precautions, but it approves the most vigorous prosecution of great and powerful offenders, and the just criticism of past administrations is that they spent too little in the employment of able counsel in such prosecutions to make the Department of Justice feared by dangerous public enemies, and therefore respected by the average citizen.—Los Angeles Examiner.

Taft's reciprocity measure won out in the Senate Saturday by a vote of 53 to 27, almost two to one. The democratic House, first passed the bill and in the Senate the democrats led in the affirmative vote, practically making the reciprocity agreement with Canada a democratic measure. The agreement was signed by President Taft Wednesday and completed our part. It goes now to Canada, whose parliament is in session, to be agreed to by the Canadians. There is no doubt but that the Canadian parliament will pass the agreement, when it will become the law in both countries at the same time.

WILL BUILD DAM

Engineers Now Surveying Dam Site in Gila River Below Mouth of Frisco

About three years ago Del M. Potter located a dam site on the Gila, where the river passes through a narrow gorge about 12 miles from Clifton, and a mile and a half below the mouth of the Frisco, the purpose of which is the building of a dam across the river at a suitable location for the heavy masonry necessary to hold a large body of water.

July 19th, Lamar Cobb and E. T. Morton, civil engineers, with seven assistants, supplies and a cook, start- for the scene of action to lay out the plans for the construction work and also to locate the lines of the irrigation ditches that will extend to the lower valley and reclaim many thousands of acres of rich farming land. The work of surveying will take at least three weeks.

This proposition is one of great importance to the district and one of great magnitude requiring a probable expenditure of nearly $3,000,000. It will be of a character that the benefits of which can hardly be estimated. With an electric power plant that can supply power a radius of fifty miles or more, means the establishment of many small as well as large industries, and the working of mines that are now idle for the reason of the high cost of power equipment and fuel.

In this respect, also, the small farmer would be blessed with cheap power to run his pumping machinery thus insuring the cultivation of hundreds of acres of land that now lie useless. There are so many favorable comments to make for this proposition that the most prominent one is hard to mention. The big companies come in for their share of the benefits far beyond any other that can be spoken of, for with cheap power they can extend their production of ores and metal far beyond the present standard.

Over at Kingman, in Mohave county, Arizona, a power plant one mile below the town transmits power for 40 miles around, making that county, its mines and other propositions a leading section of Arizona, where a few years ago, all was a barren waste, yet now is a teeming mass of industry.

The progress of the Gila dam will be watched with interest, not only in this community, but by the outside world at large.

CLEAN FRUIT IN SIGHT

More Spraying Needed to Kill Off New Brood of Worms

Those who have followed the advice of the Horticultural Commission in regard to spraying with arsenate of lead for the worms of the codling moth are feeling good over the result.

From my band records, I find that a large brood of worms emerged from the fruit and spun up between the fifth and twenty-third of July.

As soon as these emerge from the cocoon, they will begin laying eggs for the next brood of worms. This will be a numerous brood and will do hundreds of dollars worth of damage if the fruit is not protected by a fresh coat of poison. The best time to apply the poison will be between the twenty-seventh and the last of July, followed by another ten days later.

Yours for clean fruit and a good price.

Horticultural Inspector.

A NEW RAILWAY

Navajo Southern Will Build South From Holbrook

A new railroad to open up the natural resources of Navajo county, will be the probable result of favorable action by the land office on maps for a right of way across public land, filed with the Arizona Land Office, Phoenix, July 17th, by the Navajo Development Company, in the interest of the Navajo Southern Railroad Company, of which F. H. Bowen and Will H. Clark, respectively, are president and secretary. It is understood that the project is backed by capitalists of Elyria, Ohio.

The proposed railroad is to be approximately seventy miles long and will run from Holbrook in a southerly direction to a point in township 8 north and 23 east, near the town of Pine, to and not far from the north line of Gila county and close to the boundary between Apache and Navajo counties. It will pass near the towns of Snowflake, Taylor, Showlow and others in that section. The maps call for a standard guage, regularly equipped commercial railroad, though it is understood that the chief incentive for building is to make available the pine timber in southern Navajo county, where it is said there is one of the largest virgin forests in the land.

A Woman in Florida

Several years ago a Vermont school teacher married a Florida planter. During his absence one winter she decided to keep the farm going. She harnessed the mule to a light plow and started in to grow two acres of beans. She harrowed, fertilized and planted, always following the best suggestions of agricultural reports and neighboring farmers, and adapting them to her own conditions. The light sandy character of the soil, which prohibits deep working, did away with the necessity for heavy farm implements, and the use of her wits saved many hours of toil. By making an apron-sack she was able to drop beans with both hands, doing two rows where her husband had done one. When picking time came she hitched the mule to a fish-net tray and dragged the loads in that in order to avoid lifting. Crates were a difficulty, but she learned to make them at the rate of ten an hour. For packing, the fruit was selected and sized with the greatest care, well wrapped and shipped as "fancy." When the returns came in she found her beans bringing from twenty-five to fifty cents more than her husband and neighbors had ever received, and the buyers complimented her on the perfection of her pack. At the end of four years this woman is cultivating six acres entirely without assistance except in picking time. There have been setbacks; worms and diseases have attacked her plants at times, but even in the poorest seasons she netted over one hundred dollars a month. —Collier's.

Murphy's Urgent Orders

Murphy was a new recruit in the cavalry. He could not ride at all, and by ill luck was given one of the most vicious horses in the troop.

"Remember," said the sergeant, no one is allowed to dismount without orders."

Murphy was no sooner in the saddle than he was thrown to the ground.

"Murphy," the sergeant yelled when he discovered him lying breathless on the ground, "you dismounted!"

"I did."

"Did you have orders?"

"I did."

"From headquarters, I suppose?"

"No, sor; from hintquarters."—Everybody's.

There are two kinds of talking machines, but only one of them, the phonograph, can be stopped.

Why He Masked

"George, dear, just one more question and I promise not to bother you any more during the game," she pleaded.

"Well, what is it now?" said George, impatiently.

"Tell me why the catcher wears that funny wire thing on his face?"

"Oh, sometimes the catcher gets mad at the umpire's decisions."

"What has that to do with it?"

"Some day he might get too mad and bite the umpire, and as they don't want that to happen they muzzle him."

There are too many kinds of advice for one man to try to take it all.

The first and last apples of a season are a delusion and a good brick.

Abusive language may have some effect, but it doesn't prove anything.

Ever know anyone who didn't find more than the ten commandments to break?

When a man's business will permit him to take a vacation he generally figures that he can't afford it.

Americans have the world fooled a good deal about the great price at which people in this land of the free are said to labor.

Maybe the time will come when the woman's work can be finished. She can now buy better and cheaper noodles than she can make, the children wear less clothing every day.

Cy Whittaker's Place

And at last came the great day, the day when Captain Cy was to be taken home. He was up and about, had been out for several short walks and was very nearly his own self again. He was in good spirits, too, at times, but had fits of seeming depression which under the circumstances were unexplainable. The doctor thought they were due to his recent illness and forbade questioning.

The original plan had been for the captain to go to Bayport in the train, but the morning set for his departure was such a beautiful one that Mr. Peabody, who had the day before returned from the city, suggested driving over. So the open carriage, drawn by the Peabody "span," was brought around to the front steps, and the captain, bundled up until, as he said, he felt like a wharf rat inside a cotton bale, emerged from the house which had sheltered him for a weary month and climbed to the back seat. The attorney got in beside him.

"All ashore that's goin' ashore," observed Captain Cy. Then to the driver who stood by the horses' heads, he added: "Stand by to get ship under way, commodore. I'm homeward bound, and there's a little messmate of mine waitin' on the dock already. I wouldn't wonder. So don't hang around these waters no longer 'n you can help."

But Mr. Peabody smiled and laid a hand on his shoulder.

"Just a minute, captain," he said. "We've got another passenger. She came to the house last evening, but Dr. Cole thought this would be an exciting day for you, and you must sleep in preparation for it. So we kept her in the background. It was something of a job, but— Hurrah! Here she is!"

Mrs. Peabody, the lawyer's wife, opened the front door. She was laughing.

"UNCLE CYRUS!" SHE SCREAMED JOYOUSLY.

The next moment a small figure shot past her down the steps and into the carriage like a red hooded bombshell.

"Uncle Cyrus!" she screamed joyously. "Uncle Cyrus, it's me! Here I am!"

And Captain Cy, springing up and, shedding wraps and robes, received the bombshell with open arms and hugged it tight.

"Bos'n!" he shouted. "By the big dipper, Bos'n! Why, you little—you—you"—

CHAPTER XXIII.

THAT was a wonderful ride. Emily sat in the captain's lap—he positively refused to let her sit beside him on the seat, although Peabody urged it, fearing the child might tire him—and her tongue rattled like a sewing machine. She had a thousand things to tell—about her school, about Georgianna, about her dolls, about Lonesome, the cat, and how many mice he had caught, and about the big snowstorm.

"Georgianna wanted me to stay at home and wait for you, Uncle Cy," she said, "but I teased and teased, and finally they said I could come over. I came yesterday on the train. Mr. Tidditt went with me to the depot. Mrs. Peabody let me peek into your room last night, and I saw you eating supper. You didn't know I was there, did you?"

"You bet I didn't! There'd have been a mutiny right then if I'd caught sight of you. You little sculpin! Playin' it on your Uncle Cy, was you? I didn't know you could keep a secret so well."

"Oh, yes, I can. Why, I know an ever so much bigger secret too. It is— Why, I most forgot! You just wait."

The captain laughingly begged her to divulge the big secret, but she shook her small head and refused. The horses trotted on at a lively pace, and the miles separating Ostable and Bayport were subtracted one by one. It was magnificent winter weather. The snow had disappeared from the road, except in widely separated spots, but the big drifts still heaped the fields and shone and sparkled in the sunshine. Against their whiteness the pitch pines and cedars stood darkly green and the skeleton scrub oaks and bushes cast delicate blue pencled shadows. The bay, seen over the flooded, frozen salt meadows and distant dunes, was in its winter dress of the deepest sapphire, trimmed with whitecaps and fringed with stranded ice-cakes. There were a snap and a tang in the breeze which braced one like a tonic. The party in the carriage was a gay one.

"Getting tired, captain?" asked Peabody.

"Who? Me? Well, I guess not. Most home, Bos'n. There's the salt works ahead there."

They passed the abandoned salt works, the crumbling ruins of a dead industry, and the boundary stone, now half hidden in a drift, marking the beginning of Bayport township. Then, from the pine grove at the curve farther on, appeared two capped and coated figures, performing a crazy fandango.

"Who's them two lunatics," inquired Captain Cy, "whoopin' and carryin' on in the middle of the road? Has anybody up this way had a jug come by express or— Hey! What? Why, you old idiots you! Come here and let me get hold of you!"

The board of strategy swooped down upon the carriage like Trumet mosquitoes on a summer boarder. They swarmed into the vehicle, Bailey on the front seat and Asaph in the rear, where, somehow or other, they made room for him. There were handshakings and thumps on the back.

"What you doin' way up here in the west end of nowhere?" demanded Captain Cy. "By the big dipper, I'm glad to see you! How'd you get here?"

"Walked," cackled Bailey, "frogged it all the way. Soon's Mrs. Peabody wired you was goin' to ride, me and Ase started to meet you. Wan't you surprised?"

"We wanted to be the fust to say howdy, old man," explained Asaph. "Wanted to welcome you back, you know."

The captain was immensely pleased.

"Well, I'm glad I've got so much popularity, anyhow," he said. "Guess 'twill be different when I get down street, hey? Don't cal'late Tad and Angie 'll shed the joyous tear over me. Never mind; long's my friends are glad I don't care about the rest."

The board looked at each other.

"Tad?" repeated Bailey. "And Angie? What you talkin' about? Why, they— Ugh!"

The last exclamation was the result of a tremendous dig in the ribs from the Tidditt fist. Asaph, who had leaned forward to administer it, was frowning and shaking his head. Mr. Bangs relapsed into a grinning silence.

West Bayport seemed to be deserted. At one or two houses, however, feminine heads appeared at the windows. One old lady shook a calico apron at the carriage. A child beside her cried "Hurrah!"

"Aunt Hepsy h'ista' colors by mistake!" laughed the captain. "She ain't got her specs, I guess, and thinks I'm Heman. That comes of ridin' astern of a span, I'm'body."

But as they drew near the center flags were flying from front yard poles. Some of the houses were decorated.

"What in the world"— began Captain Cy. "Land sakes! Look at the schoolhouse, and Simmons', and—and Simpson's!"

The schoolhouse flag was flapping in the wind. The scarred wooden pillars of its portico were hidden with bunting. Simmons' front displayed a row of little banners, each bearing a letter. The letters spelled "Welcome Home!" Tad's barber shop was more or less artistically wreathed in colored tissue paper. There, too, a flag was draped over the front door. Yet not a single person was in sight.

"For goodness' sake," cried the bewildered captain, "what's all this mean? And where is everybody? Have all hands"—

He stopped in the middle of the sentence. They were at the foot of Whittaker's hill. Its top, between the Atkins' gate and the Whittaker fence, was black with people. Children pranced about the outskirts of the crowd. A shout came down the wind. The horses, not in the least fatigued by their long canter, trotted up the slope. The shouting grew louder. A wave of youngsters came racing to meet the equipage.

"What—what in time?" gasped Captain Cy. "What's up? I"—

And then the town clerk seized him by the arm. Peabody shook his other hand. Bos'n threw her arms about his neck. Bailey stood up and waved his hat.

"It's you, you old critter!" whooped Asaph. "It's you, d'you understand?"

"The appropriation has at last gone through," explained the lawyer, "and this is the celebration in consequence. And you are the star attraction, because, you see, every one knows you are responsible for it."

"That's what!" howled the excited Bangs. "And we're going to show you what we think of you for doin' it. We've been plannin' this for over a fortni't."

"And I knew it all the time," squealed Bos'n, "and I didn't tell a word, did I?"

"Three cheers for Captain Whittaker!" bellowed a person in the crowd. This person—wonder of wonders!—was Tad Simpson.

The cheering was, considering the size of the crowd, tremendous. Bewildered and amazed, Captain Cy was assisted from the carriage and escorted to his front door. Amid the handkerchief waving, applauding people he saw Keturah Bangs and Alpheus Smalley and Angeline Phinney and Captain Salters—even Alonzo Snow, his recent opponent in town meeting. Josiah Dimick was there, too, apparently having a fit.

On the doorstep stood Georgianna, and—and—yes, it was true—beside her, grandly extending a welcoming hand, the majestic form of the Hon. Heman Atkins. Some one else was there also, some one who hurriedly slipped back into the crowd as the owner of the Cy Whittaker place came up the path between the hedges.

Mr. Atkins shook the captain's hand and then, turning toward the people, held up his own for silence. To all outward appearance he was still the great Heman, our district idol, philanthropist and leader. His silk hat glistened as of old; his chest swelled in the old manner; his whiskers were just as dignified and awe inspiring. For an instant, as he met the captain's eye, his own faltered and fell, and there was a pleading expression in his face, the lines of which had deepened just a little, but only for an instant; then he began to speak.

"Cyrus," he said, "it is my pleasant duty, on behalf of your neighbors and friends here assembled, to welcome you to your—or—ancestral home after your trying illness. I do it heartily, sincerely, gladly. And it is the more pleasing to me to perform this duty because, as I have explained publicly to my fellow townspeople, all disagreement between us is ended. I was wrong, again I publicly admit it. A scheming blackleg, posing in the guise of a loving father, imposed upon me. I am sorry for the trouble I have caused you. Of you and of the little girl with you I ask pardon—I entreat forgiveness."

He paused. Captain Cy, the shadow of a smile at the corner of his mouth, nodded and said briefly:

"All right, Heman. I forgive you."

Few heard him. The majority were applauding the congressman. Sylvanus Cahoon, whispering in the ear of Uncle Betsy, expressed as his opinion that "that was about as magnaminious a thing as ever I heard said—yes, sir, mag-na-min-ious—that's what I call it."

"But," continued the great Atkins, "I have said all this to you before. What I have to say now—what I left my duties in Washington expressly to come here and say—is that Bayport thanks you, I thank you, for your tremendous assistance in obtaining the appropriation which is to make our harbor a busy port, where our gallant fishing fleet may ride at anchor and unload its catch, instead of transferring it in dories, as heretofore. Friends, I have already told you how this man," laying a hand on the captain's shoulder, "came to the capital and used his influence among his acquaintances in high places, with the result that the $30,000 which I had despaired of getting was added to the bill. I had the pleasure of voting for that bill. It passed. I am proud of that vote."

Tremendous applause. Then some one called for three cheers for Mr. Atkins. They were given. But the recipient merely bowed.

If You Are

LOOKING FOR AN INVESTMENT IN THE GILA VALLEY

The Arizona Realty Co.

Has something that will pay you to investigate. One of the biggest as well as the best propositions in the farming or ranch lands in Arizona at the present time.

We have for sale at a reasonable rock bottom price and exceptionally good terms, a 650-acre farm in the Gila Valley, fully equipped with farming implements and machinery, such as threshers, headers, mowers, rakes, derricks, wagons, plows, harrows, etc., and owning an entire canal of its own which stands next in priority to the San Jose canal, furnishing an abundant supply of water the year round for the entire acreage.

400 acres of this farm is now under cultivation, and 100 more can easily be put in shape. The balance is the best kind of pasture land, and all enclosed under a five-wire fence.

This proposition would be cheap at $50,000, but can be bought for considerable less, with a comparatively small cash payment down, and the balance on time at a low rate of interest.

8,000 bushels would be a conservative estimate of the grain crop which has just been harvested, besides the hay and other products, and the entire canal expense will not exceed $75.00 per annum.

Let us show you this ranch and convince you that it is the best proposition in the market today in this entire country.

Terms and Price on Application

We also have a fully equipped butcher shop in a good locality for sale at a great bargain. A good business is being done at the present time, and it is one of the old established markets of the valley. A good opportunity for the right man.

Ever know anyone who didn't find more than the ten commandments to break?

PREJUDICE.

Curious to state, prejudice keeps us out of more good things than does lack of opportunity.

We often pass by an article of merit because the price is low. The same article at double the price would find us eager to try it. K C Baking Powder sells for one-third the price of the Baking Powders controlled by the "Trust."

Yet K C is guaranteed the Best Baking Powder at any price.

The ladies of this city who have seen what K C Baking Powder will do prefer it to any other. They are only too glad to save their money and get a better article. It's the difference between "Trust" prices and those of fair, honest competition.

A 25 ounce can of K C Baking Powder for 25 cents,—and your money returned if you don't like it better.

No Match For a Woman

By SADIE OLCOTT

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"Jaques," said the wife of Jaques Chabouliez, "I wish you would not be so intimate with Pierre Fabri. He has Italian blood in his veins and I don't place faith in those people."

"Pierre is my best friend."

"And you will not be on your guard against him?"

"No. You women take sudden dislikes. Ten to one Pierre has not treated you with that deference or consideration a woman craves from all men."

"He has treated me with the utmost consideration."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Well, since I must either tell you or leave you to stupidly put yourself in his power I will do so. Know then that before I married you Pierre proposed to me."

"Ah! Well, if a woman loves a man that another woman loves she will to gain her ends resort to any trickery to dispossess the other. You are a woman, and you look upon Pierre through a woman's eye. I am not afraid of him."

This was in 1870, when the Prussians were marching into France. One day a party of French soldiers stepped up to Jaques Chabouliez and arrested him. They took him to headquarters, and the general ordered them to search him. In one of his pockets was found a tiny ball no bigger than a pill. It was carefully pulled apart and proved to be tissue paper. On it was written the position and strength of the different French army corps opposing the Prussians.

"That is sufficient," said the general. "Take him out and shoot him."

There was no formality of a trial. Jaques, who was at a loss how to account for the paper being in his pocket, was taken out and was about to suffer death when a volley came from a wood near by. It was fired by a line of Prussian skirmishers, who had arrived just in time to save poor Jaques' life. His French guards took to their heels. Jaques was a true Frenchman, but he would rather live among his country's enemies than die among his country's defenders.

The territory in which Jaques Chabouliez lived was from that time till the end of the war occupied by the Prussians, so that he had no cause for fear that he would be shot for a spy. Both he and his wife knew that the paper which had convicted him had been put into his pocket by some one who was anxious to get him out of the way. Mme. Chabouliez suggested that it might be her husband's friend, Pierre Fabri. Jaques was very wroth with her for intimating such a thing.

One evening when Jaques came home he found no supper, nor did he find his wife. There was not even a fire in the stove. Astonished, he went out and inquired of the neighbors if they had seen Mme. Chabouliez. After many inquiries he learned that she, in company with Fabri, had been seen going toward the Prussian picket line. Then he began to lament and to curse and to swear, saying that no man could be sufficiently guarded against the duplicity of women. His wife had been endeavoring to prejudice him against his best friend, and now she had gone off with that friend.

Nothing was seen or heard of Mme. Chabouliez or Pierre Fabri, and the deserted husband assumed that to get rid of him or to be where he could not get at them to punish them they had gone within the French lines. As the days passed and he heard nothing of them he made up his mind that his wife, in order that he might be shot, thus rendering her a widow and enabling her to marry her lover, had put the paper in his pocket that had so nearly cost him his life. This failing, she had gone off with Pierre.

One evening when he was almost ready to kill himself through grief and anger at the treatment he had received his wife walked into their home. His first impulse was to order her away. Then it occurred to him that if she had gone away with Fabri she would not have returned. But he had not long to wait for an explanation. She threw a piece of paper on the table. He picked it up and read on it a confession from Fabri that he had put the paper in her husband's pocket and then informed on him. Amazed, he asked her how she had obtained it.

"I told Pierre," she replied. "I had long regretted that I had not married him instead of you. Then I proposed that we go within the French lines and live together where you would not find us. So we went through the Prussian outposts and on into the French lines. On the way I told Pierre that I knew he had placed the paper in the pocket that was found there, that I forgave him because he did it for love of me and that if his ruse had succeeded we could have been married instead of living together illicitly. He denied that he had done this, so I refused to go any further with him until he admitted it. He did so, and I had little trouble later in getting that written confession."

"Where is Pierre now? I shall kill him!" exclaimed Chabouliez.

"Pierre is dead."

"Dead!"

"Yes. I served him as he served you. I put information in his pocket for the Prussians and then informed on him for a spy."

"Dead! No man can be so big a devil as a woman."

And he embraced her.

"After You, Sir"

By F. TOWNSEND SMITH

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

While sauntering leisurely along a thoroughfare, smoking, largely for the purpose of killing time, I was accosted by a gentlemanly, well dressed man who doffed his hat before speaking to me.

"I beg pardon, sir," he said, "but could you spare me a little of your time?"

"For what purpose, sir?"

"That is not easy to explain on the street. If you will step inside I will show you rather than tell you."

"Inside where?"

"Right here."

He pointed to an open door, and I could see a staircase. The building seemed to be unused.

There are people who seem to have a power to make other people obey them, not by force, not always by insistence. In this case the man was so gentlemanly in his request that I did not like to refuse him. At any rate, before I realized what I was doing I had gone to the upper floor of an unoccupied building with a person who had accosted me on the street and asked me to go with him, for what purpose he had not explained. This seems to me now absurd on the face of it, and at the time I knew that I should do no such thing, but I couldn't help it.

He took me into a room on the second floor. In its center was what looked to me to be a hot air furnace, only it was neither round nor square, but oblong. He closed the door behind us, and I heard a click. I didn't like it, for it sounded as though it came from a lock that closed automatically. I was about to turn and get out of the place, but my pride held me, and I waited to be informed further as to this strange proceeding. The gentleman led me to a corner of the room railed off apparently for an office, where there were chairs, and invited me to be seated.

"Do you see that oven?" he said. "Well, that has cost me a great deal of labor. Perhaps you think it is a crematory, but it is not. It is an oven for baking bread. A hundred loaves can be baked at once and in three minutes. That's 2,000 loaves an hour, and by working day and night three relieffs we have 28,000 loaves a day. Six working days give us 168,000 loaves a week. Fifty-two weeks produce 8,733,000 loaves a year.

"So much for what my oven will do. Now for my object. It is to feed the world. You see, my single oven is not large. Suppose there are ten of them in this building alone. That gives 87,360,000 loaves a year, only about 4,000,000 miles less than the distance of the earth from the sun."

Since I could see no relationship between loaves of bread and the earth's distance from the sun I began to feel a bit uncertain about the gentleman's upper story. So I said to him, rising:

"You'll have to excuse me, sir. It is not possible for me to remain any longer."

"But you have not examined my invention. Besides, I told you I wanted you for a purpose."

"What purpose?"

"Come; I will show you."

He led me to the oven. He seemed so harmless that I followed him. He threw open the door, displaying a number of iron shelves. I was somewhat relieved that there was no heat in the oven.

"My arrangement for heat is by chemical process. There are many substances that produce heat in combining chemically. Why should we burn coal? I turn this cock and my substances run together. In a short time I shall have my oven quite hot enough to do my baking."

"I wouldn't turn it on if I were you," I remarked, "since you have no bread ready for baking."

"I have something else. My desire is to bake a human being."

This was getting warm, as the children say when hunting for things in games. And, as the strange gentleman looked at me, indicating that I was the human being he proposed to bake, I felt not only warm, but a cold perspiration stood out on me, especially when he drew a long sharp knife with which to enforce his demands. I knew I had to deal with a lunatic and kept my head.

"I shall be happy," I said, "to have you bake me. On which shelf am I to take position?"

"Step in and I will show you."

"After you," I said deferentially, bowing and raising my hat.

He stepped into the furnace. I closed the door with a bang, and the big iron latch fell into position. Then the room swam, and I fell on the floor. But I did not remain there long. Fearful that the lunatic might smother, I ran to the door of the room, found it locked and could not open it. I tried a window, and that served a call through. In a few minutes a policeman came up the stairs, broke down the door and let the gentleman baker out. He was nearly suffocated and gave no trouble. He had employed men to build his oven without their having the slightest suspicion as to his sanity. I learned that he was a scientific man and had been an inventive genius as well. On my testimony he was committed to an asylum.

It makes me crawl when I think that by a mere act of politeness I was saved from death.

A Shrewd American Girl

By HELOISE BRAYTON

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Miss Christine Atherton, an English girl whose birth had been of ordinary parents, was a guest at the seat of the Duke of Brentnard. Miss Atherton was in love with the duke's oldest son and heir, the Marquis of Hiddleton.

Among the guests at the duke's residence, Slapper Grange, was a Kansas girl, Miss Edith Brown, the daughter of one who if he had been titled would have been called the prince of packers. Miss Brown was expected to inherit a large fortune, and this was the reason for her being at Slapper Grange, for the Brentnards were not overburdened with ready cash, and the marquis was on the lookout for a wealthy American wife.

Now, Miss Brown had no more reverence for a title than for a membership of a sewing society. She was one of the kind to see through a millstone, and it was plain to her that the marquis wanted her for her money, and Miss Atherton wanted the marquis for himself.

"So long as I don't want him myself," mused Miss Brown, "why shouldn't I help this young English girl to get him?"

Now, there was a skeleton in the Brentnard closet. The duke, who was an old man, was a kleptomaniac. He was not allowed when in the city to go into the shops without a footman to follow him and pay for what he stole. When the old gentleman appropriated an article the footman would step up to the clerk behind the counter from which it was taken and say:

"'Is grace is shopping today. 'Ow much for the 'and mirror 'e took?"

"I see," the clerk would reply. "That one is three and six."

This would be followed up by other purchases acquired in the same way and duly paid for by the footman. There was nothing upon which the marquis was so sensitive as this mania of his father. He had made every effort to avoid the disgrace, even to an attempt to shut his father up, but as kleptomania is not a form of insanity that warrants confining a person in bedlam the duke maintained his liberty.

One morning Miss Brown remained in her room when the others were down to breakfast and, being alone on the floor, went into Miss Atherton's room, took all the jewelry the poor girl had, carried it to the duke's apartment and slipped it into the pocket of a coat she found hanging in a closet. Then she went downstairs to breakfast.

After the meal Miss Brown kept Miss Atherton under observation so that she might be the first to meet the English girl after the discovery of the loss. Just before luncheon Miss Atherton came out of her room with a terror stricken look on her face. Miss Brown was in the hall.

"My jewels!" exclaimed Miss Atherton.

"What of 'em?" asked Miss Brown, putting a finger on her lip to enjoin caution.

"They're gone."

"Hist! The duke? You know his failing?"

"I've heard of it."

"Don't say a word about it. The marquis would never forgive you."

"Do you really think it best?"

"I do."

"And I must lose the gems?"

"Never mind that; they will come back to you."

That night at dinner Miss Atherton appeared without a particle of jewelry. The marquis noticed it, but made no comment. After dinner he joined Miss Atherton on the terrace. He never noticed the absence of anything belonging to any of his guests without dreading lest his father had purloined it.

"Christine," he said, "why did you leave off your jewels today at dinner?"

"Oh, they're so insignificant," she said, "compared with what the other ladies wear."

"Miss Brown, for instance."

The lady named had that day appeared bedizened with a small fortune in diamonds.

"Hers are very handsome."

"Umph! These Americans don't know when or where to load up with stones."

When on future occasions the marquis noticed that Miss Atherton still refrained from wearing her jewels he wondered. Then one day Miss Brown spoke to him of the omission.

"She doesn't wear them," said the marquis, "because she's ashamed of them."

"Nonsense," replied Miss Brown. "That's not her reason. She has too much kindness in her to hurt your feelings by giving you the true one."

"Good gracious! You don't mean they have been stolen!"

"I do."

"And the thief?"

"Search your father's pockets."

The marquis made the search and returned the jewels. The incident decided him on marrying for love or money. He proposed to Miss Atherton, much touched that she had preferred to lose her finery to accusing his father.

"As for that American girl," he added, "she had the indelicacy common among her countrymen. She did not hesitate to remind me that my father is a thief."

Miss Brown left the grange covered with jewels, but when she got in a train she put them in her satchel.
